

THE SIGN OF THE BEAVER

by Elizabeth George Speare
Dougherty Middle, 1960

ABOUT THE BOOK

Until the day his father returns to their cabin in the Maine wilderness, twelve-year-old Matt must try to survive on his own. Although he is brave, he's not prepared for an attack by voracious bears, and he's astonished when he is rescued by an Indian chief and his grandson, Atticus.

As the boys come to know each other Atticus learns to speak English while Matt becomes a skilled hunter. Though many months have passed, there's no sign of Matt's family. Then Atticus asks Matt to join the Beaver tribe and swear death. Should Matt abandon his hopes of ever seeing his family again and move to a new life?

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Elizabeth Speare spends nearly one year in gathering information for her historical novels, which include Cadino Captive, The Wind of Blasted Flood and The Bronze Bow. She finds that there is much she must know about the people she writes about, from the clothes they wore to the food they ate. As she visits many libraries and museums gathering background material she finds that the story continues to grow in her mind.

Book Details

Twelve-year-old Matt shook his head in disgust. The disgust was with himself, it was his carelessness that let the stranger in the house...the stranger who took off in the night with Matt's gun...his only means of getting food. It was his carelessness that left the cabin open to a hungry bear who destroyed everything in sight and took the little food Matt had left.

When Matt's father left to get the rest of the family he trusted Matt to care for himself for the four weeks he would be alone. And Matt had let him down. Fish was still plentiful and he had his bow and line. It looked like a steady diet of fish was ahead. Then Matt remembered...the bear trail. A taste of honey wine would be a treat.

"It was an easy tree to climb and the bear didn't even seem to notice as he pulled himself higher and higher. Peering in a small hole he could just glimpse far inside the golden mass of honeysuckle. The bark around the hole was rotted and crumbling. He put his fingers on the edge and gave a slight tug. A good-sized piece of bark broke off in his hand.

With it came the bees. The humming grew to a roar, like a great wind. Matt felt a sharp pain and another and another. The angry creatures swarmed along his hands and bare arms, in his hair, on his face.

Matt's only hope was to smother it in the icy-cold water of the river. This was the most foolish thing he had ever done and he'd live to regret it if, that is, he lived.
