MULTIPARAMETRIC MRI OF THE PEDIATRIC

SPINAL CORD Shiva Shahrapour,2023 Quantitative magnetic resonance imaging MRI measurements of the pediatric spinal cord is important for both diagnostic and treatment planning In recent years several quantitative MRI qMRI techniques that have been developed and tested to measure functional and structural information of the spinal cord tissue and microstructure Several of the existing structural and functional imaging biomarkers i e diffusion tensor imaging DTI have demonstrated potential for providing microstructural information about the spinal cord However due to the lack of a standard anatomical template of the pediatric spinal cord quantification of the spinal cord tissue has been challenging Therefore one of the goals of this work is to develop and test tools for quantification as well as the creation of a standard structural template of the typically developing TD pediatric spinal cord This will allow automated measurement of normative values of the spinal cord cross sectional area SCCSA at various levels of the spinal cord Furthermore to examine the white matter WM microstructure of the pediatric cord we developed a processing pipeline for the atlas based generation of TD pediatric spinal cord WM tracts This will facilitate the measurements of normative diffusion values for various WM tracts A group of 30 TD subjects age range of 6 17 years old 12 38 2 81 who had no evidence of spinal cord injury or pathology were recruited We utilized a multiparametric MRI protocol including high resolution T2 w structural and diffusion weighted MRI images to scan the subjects on a 3T MRI scanner The diffusion data were acquired using a novel iFOV DTI sequence For quantification a post processing pipeline was utilized to generate the structural pediatric template Next WM tracts were generated using an atlas based approach and diffusion metrics FA MD RD and AD were quantified in 34 tracts identified in the processing pipeline Normative SCCSA and DTI diffusion indices were generated for the TD population Lastly we demonstrated that DTI indices i e FA can be a predictive measure of components of the clinical test for spinal cord injury as well as an indicator of the white matter tracts integrity Therefore in the final step of this work we expanded our quantitative analysis to look at the microstructural and macrostructural changes in 15 children with chronic spinal cord injury SCI AIS A D mean age of 12 8 3 1 years This included measurements of SCCSA diffusion metrics and T2 WM GM ratio of various white matter tracts in the patient population We also examined the relationships between all the metrics and the ISNCSCI clinical scores in SCI subjects We then compared these measurements between the TD and SCI patients to evaluate the diagnostic utility of these techniques and biomarkers Statistically significant difference was observed between the two populations in the studied metrics The results show that the proposed techniques may have the potential to be used as surrogate biomarkers for the quantification of the injured spinal cord Keywords diffusion tensor imaging typically developing spinal cord injury spinal cord cross sectional area fractional anisotropy mean diffusivity axial diffusivity radial diffusivity
