

Creating Black Americans Chapter 6 Review Questions

1. In what ways did black men in the North respond to the outbreak of the Civil War?
 - a. Black Men in the North took to arms as quickly as the call to service came. Despite the view by many Northerners of this war being a "white man's war". Black men formed militia companies in New York City, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Providence, Cleveland, Battle Creek, Detroit, & Washington D.C. Their services would be initially refused by the Lincoln administration, but eventually accepted as means to help win the war.
 1. The refusal of service shows the clasp of ignorance this mindset held over the United States. More disgustingly, is the fact that this mindset has persisted through generations of Black accomplishment and achievement. One need not look far for examples of this manner. In our classroom, peers boxed in African American children and their aspirations to becoming that of rappers or athletes. The most disheartening part is that if the topic of white children had come into discussion, then I do not doubt the existence of endless possibility for those children.
2. What was the Civil War-era "Double Vee" strategy of African Americans and their allies?
 - a. This strategy relied on victory for two areas in the African American struggle. They needed to win the war for their homefront and the abroad front. The abroad front referred to areas of the United States that still remained held to the slave mindset. Victory in the war would bring multiple steps in progress for civil rights. As always in American history however, these steps forward caused the racial ideologies of the time to evolve.
3. When did Union policy declare the war a struggle against slavery? Were black Americans caught by surprise?
 - a. The Union recognized the Civil War as the center of the war as soon as it started in 1861. Frederick Douglass even made a remark that commented on the division that had been caused between Black & White peace. Due to the polar opposite views on the moral spectrum, there would be no compromise on the matter of slavery.
4. What roles did black women play during the war?
 - a. Women took up worker roles, and heads of household positions in the community. While the Black male took to the war, Black women seamlessly stepped into the hole that was created in the household. This bolstering of the household served to hold the community together. They adapted to the situation, and proved to help in fields, workshops, and forests.
5. Where did the black soldiers in the Union Army come from? Why is that important with regard to the outcome of the war?
 - a. The majority of the Black soldiers in the Union Army ended up coming from the South upon their freedom. This statement is important because it shows the duality of emancipating the enslaved of the south. While this moral step may have been necessary for the United States, it may have been taken with strategic motivations.
