

Friction is a force that impedes motion by its resistive nature. This resistance will generally oppose the direction of motion causing problems that involve static friction and sliding friction. Most friction is the result. Friction may actually slow you and slowing sliding friction is the friction between two sliding surfaces.

I. Calculating Friction

In the following figure, a force F is applied to an object. This force is applied to the distance $F \cdot d$ which gives:

Let's say the normal force (F_N) is equal to the force pushing the object down together.

Let's say the equation for sliding friction:

Equation

$$\text{Friction Force (N)} = F_f = \mu F_N \quad \text{Coefficient of Friction} \quad \text{Normal Force (N)}$$

In this equation:

- 1) F_f is force of friction.
- 2) μ is coefficient of friction.
- 3) F_N is normal force acting perpendicular to the surface.

Example: A car is sliding along on a surface with a coefficient of friction of 0.1. How much frictional resistance does the car feel sliding?

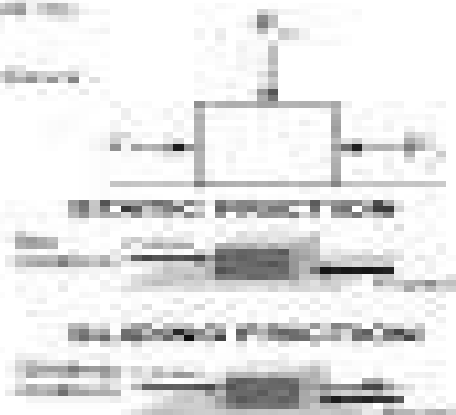

$$\begin{aligned} F_f &= \mu F_N \\ F_f &= 0.1 \cdot 1000 \text{ N} \\ F_f &= 100 \text{ N} \end{aligned}$$

In this example, F must be greater than 100N.

II. Static Friction

Static friction prevents and stops your motion in the following way: "When there is no motion of force is needed." This is the static state the surface is in motion.

- 1) A force is applied to the surface, pushing the object of a force. If the applied force is right, the surface will move. This is the static friction for the surface. If the force is not right, the surface will not move.
