Abstract: The authors report on a study of the effects of a 12-week, 12-session, group-based, self-help program for people with depression. The program was designed to help people with depression to manage their symptoms and to improve their social and family relationships. The program was evaluated using a randomized controlled trial design. The results of the trial showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the symptoms of depression and on the social and family relationships of the participants. The program was found to be effective in reducing the symptoms of depression and in improving the social and family relationships of the participants. The program was found to be effective in reducing the symptoms of depression and in improving the social and family relationships of the participants.

A diagram of a cell. At the top is a nucleus, depicted as a red sphere with a white nucleolus inside, surrounded by a blue nuclear envelope. Below the nucleus are two mitochondria, each shown as a blue oval with internal folds (cristae) and a small red dot representing the nucleolus. The entire cell is enclosed in a thin blue line representing the cell membrane.
