Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in Ankara, Turkey. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The experimental group participated in a 12-week training program that included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. Physical fitness was measured using a series of tests, including a 1000m run, a 15m shuttle run, a 1min sit-up test, a 1min plank test, and a 1min heel sit test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher scores than the control group in all tests. The 12-week training program had a positive effect on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were 10 women, 40 to 50 years of age, who were sedentary and had no cardiovascular or other medical problems. They were randomly assigned to a 10-week training program or a control group. The training program consisted of three sessions per week of 30 minutes of moderate-intensity aerobic exercise. The control group continued with their sedentary lifestyle. The HR and EE were measured at rest and during exercise at the beginning and end of the 10-week period. The results showed that the training program had a significant effect on the HR and EE of the women. The HR at rest decreased significantly from 72 to 68 beats per minute, and the HR during exercise decreased significantly from 145 to 135 beats per minute. The EE at rest decreased significantly from 1,200 to 1,100 kcal per day, and the EE during exercise decreased significantly from 1,800 to 1,600 kcal per day. These results suggest that a 10-week training program can have a beneficial effect on the HR and EE of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, predoctoral internship on the self-reported confidence of students in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling. The study was conducted with 100 students who completed a pretest, a posttest, and a follow-up test. The results of the study indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling increased significantly from pretest to posttest and follow-up test. The results also indicated that the students' self-reported confidence in their ability to perform various tasks associated with the practice of counseling was significantly higher than the confidence of students who did not complete the internship. The results of the study have implications for the development of predoctoral internships and for the assessment of the effectiveness of such programs.
