Investigations have been limited mostly to studies with the device, but a few biological systems, such as the liver, of the FRC have been found to be sensitive to acoustically generated pressure. A theoretical study has shown that a mechanical impedance of 1000 g/cm² is required to produce a significant acoustic pressure wave and, if transmitted and used by an oscillator with the same characteristics, that same mechanical impedance is a rather unreasonable value. However, there are no guarantees that impedance will not appear in a purely elastic medium. In this regard, there are theoretical estimates of a 1000 g/cm² value for biological systems, as well as the observation that, in some cases, the impedance of the medium is not the same as the impedance of the medium itself, and, in this case, it is suggested that the impedance of the medium is not the same as the impedance of the medium itself.
