

- Effect on capital is equal for almost all countries: the membership causes all governments to increase the number of years of compulsory schooling. The weighted estimates of the membership impact for the average country are equal to 0.03 years of schooling. The regression estimates often contain an outlier effect from the membership.
- The membership may also have an effect on the age at which the average student enters the labor force. The average age of the conscripted 18-year-olds within the sample across the countries is not affected. Thus, there are no effects on the membership.
- * It is equal to zero for almost all countries. The conscripted 18-year-olds are not affected by the membership. The membership may have an effect on the age at which the average student enters the labor force.
