QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The car has been running fine for the last 10 years. Recently, the car has been running rough and the engine is making a knocking sound. I have changed the oil and filter, but the problem persists. What could be the cause of this problem?

ANSWER The most common cause of a knocking sound in an engine is worn pistons or connecting rods. This can be caused by age, lack of maintenance, or a bad oil change. It is important to have the engine inspected by a mechanic as soon as possible to prevent further damage. The mechanic will likely perform a compression test and a visual inspection of the engine components. If the pistons or connecting rods are worn, they will need to be replaced. This is a major repair, but it is necessary to get the engine running smoothly again. Another possibility is a bad timing belt. If the timing belt is worn or broken, it can cause the engine to knock. A mechanic can check the timing belt and replace it if necessary. Finally, a bad oil change can also cause engine knocking. If the oil is old or the filter is clogged, it can cause the engine to run poorly. Make sure you are using the correct oil and changing it regularly.

QUESTION A 60-year-old male with a 20-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents with a 2-week history of increasing fatigue, weight loss, and decreased appetite. He reports that he has been unable to tolerate his usual diet and has lost approximately 10 pounds. He has no recent changes in his medications. His medical history is significant for hypertension, hyperlipidemia, and chronic kidney disease (stage 3). He is a former smoker and drinks alcohol occasionally. His family history is notable for type 2 diabetes mellitus in his mother and father. He is currently taking metformin, insulin glargine, and insulin lispro. His last hemoglobin A1c was 8.5%.

ANSWER The patient's symptoms and history are consistent with type 2 diabetes mellitus. The most likely cause of his symptoms is a complication of diabetes, such as hypoglycemia or diabetic ketoacidosis. The patient's weight loss and decreased appetite suggest a metabolic process, such as hyperthyroidism or a malignancy. The patient's history of type 2 diabetes mellitus and his current medications (metformin, insulin glargine, and insulin lispro) suggest that he is on a regimen of insulin therapy. The patient's last hemoglobin A1c was 8.5%, which is above the target range for most patients with type 2 diabetes mellitus.
