

Outline for This I Believe Essay

What is the creed for your This I Believe essay?

- Doing what you love for work makes you happier.

Is your creed/essay too broad to get down to specifics for a short essay?

Is your creed positive?

- My creed is specific and positive.

What is your essay's title? It can't be "This I Believe," and I challenge you to be more creative than restating your creed.

- Does Choosing a Job Choose Your Happiness to?

Describe the basic overview of what you'll write about. One or two sentences.

- I am going to write about how doing work that you love to do makes people happier. I'm going to explain the differences between how a person does a job they love vs a job they hate.

Why did you make this choice?

- I think it's interesting how one choice can change your mood for life.

Sketch out a plan, free write, sequenced outline, or bulleted list of how you're shaping the essay. (You can be 'sloppy' with proper English here—the emphasis is on idea generating, not perfection.)

- how people feel when they have a job they love, vs a job they hate
- what having a job you love does for you
- my story of a job I hated and was miserable at. (Market Basket)
- how the managers treated me, how busy it was there. How many hours I worked and how tiring it was for me.
- My mood when I had this job
- My mood after I found a better job.
- Why people should choose jobs they might like better than ones they would be miserable in.

What about your audience? The idea is that this could be posted on the This I Believe website or read aloud on NPR. Does your creed have universal appeal? For example, students in the past have written about how they overcame a personal obstacle, but are you taking into consideration how to transfer that experience so the creed is something from which we can all benefit?

- anyone with a job can relate to my creed. Almost everyone has done a job they hated more than others.

How are you going to incorporate the best practices of Narration and Description from our textbook? Incorporate as many terms from the text as you can.

- Naming specific objects from the scene.
- Describing precise movements
- Describe vividly
- Sensory details
- Dialogue to show drama

What questions do you have for me?
