Sample Book Insights

- 1 Play is often said to be difficult for children with neurological difficulties especially autism Asperger's syndrome and sensory processing disorder However when these children are taught effective ways to engage with objects and people they have fun
- 2 The games and activities in this book are designed to increase a child's engagement in the world around him or her When a child doesn't appear to register what we say or do or appears to register it in a negative or fearful way the natural reaction is to pull back and give less
- 3 When interacting with any children including those with neurological difficulties we must assume that they are connecting to us and getting something from the interaction even if it doesn't seem like they are
- 4 To be motivated to participate in an activity the child must perceive it as being fun If the activity is too complicated or long many children will not engage To be motivated they need to perceive activities as being fun
