(Pg 612) What Enabled Europeans To Carve Out Huge Empires An Ocean Away From Their Homelands

Some things that enabled the Europeans to go to the Americas were disease because of the immunity that the European people had another thing that helped them was the fact that Atlantic winds blew steadily in the same direction and once these winds were mastered it provided much easier travel for the Europeans because they didn't need to rely on the monsoon season like in the Indian Ocean something that motivated the Europeans to do so was the need for grain, livestock, etc more that pushed this move was the European rulers more that pushed them into that direction was the need for straight access to Asian wealth so they tried to bypass the middle intermediate and in doing so it built on the sailing skills of exploring and often allowed for the American colonies trade companies to send back many different skills such as metal working gunpowder weapons and horse back riding they also brought with them European diseases which features had no immunity to devastating locations within the Americas the diseases that did not were usually smallpox, measles, typhus, influenza, malaria, and yellow fever. New territory needed to be gained so that they could farm and stabilize their economy another big motivation for traders was money

The 3 Gs

Glory: People wanted things name after them or wanted to adventure

God: Wanted to share their religion

Gold: Needed the wealth badly also spices became a very important and very sought after ## (pg 624) What Large Scale Transformations Did European Empires Generate?

The Europeans Made many large changes to the Americas because of the mass dying, however they also had many other changes such as bringing horses, pigs, cattle, sheep, and sheep. All of this made it easier for the Europeans to adapt to their new society helping to bring their older ways of life to the Americas doing so transformed many Tribal societies making them go from a hunting way of life to a more hunting based life due to horses being used to hunt down bringing some of the responsibilities off of the tribes which also reducing their status however the food from the Americas was sent back to the Eastern Hemisphere being very sought after due to its nutritional value these were corn, potatoes, and Cassava more that was sent was chocolate and tobacco which were both considered at this time the Chinese had developed coffee and tea which were being shipped worldwide the mexican silver mines were also added to the Europeans wealth the slave trade brought workers to work on the plantations increasing coffee production lots of this information began the scientific revolution propelling people forward in inventions and many other discoveries all of this made lots of wealth for the Europeans

(pg 627) What Was The Economic Foundation Of Colonial Rule In Mexico And Peru? How Did It Shape The Kinds Of Societies That Arose There?

The economic foundation for the colonial rule in Mexico and Peru was commercial agriculture much of it on large land estates, another big thing was silver and gold mining most of the labor for these things were native labor this was done by the legal system called encomiendas which pretty much said that the natives owed the Spanish for protection so they had to work for them with this system became outdated and was replaced by the system known as the repartimiento which gave more power to the Spanish more both of these were said to be based due to the christian faith this created a hierarchy of people

(pg 630) How Did The Plantation Societies Of Brazil And Caribbean Differ From Those Of Southern Colonies In British North America

The Brazilian and Caribbean were very different than the southern colonies in British North America because of the fact that the Caribbean and Brazil had centered the market on sugar making a lot of profit as well as having a lot more racial diversity having millions of Africans working their plantations and other racial mixtures accounting for 10 percent the British North American were very different focusing more on Tobacco, Rice, Cotton and Indigo but the social outcomes were quite different from those farther south and these plantations experienced less racial mixing compared to the Caribbean and Brazil however slavery in these areas was less harsh than in the sugar plantations however the slave owners on the sugar plantations freed more slaves than the ones in the Americas More self government in the British colonies compared to the Spanish and the Spanish were more worried about spreading their religion to the locals
