2. What does the term "responsible" mean to you and why is it important?

Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus ($n = 60$) was isolated from various sources. Some strains were susceptible to all antibiotics tested; however, most strains produced resistance against one or more drugs. Strains giving rise to a large family of enterotoxins and heat-labile exfoliative toxin were also resistant to penicillin and methicillin. The isolates were characterized by their phage-typing patterns and by serotyping according to protein A and coagulase. Most strains gave rise to both types of enterotoxin. Although it is likely that staphylococcal infection could result with consequences that are avoidable, there remains considerable room for improvement.
